SOME FRIENDS OF LABOR.

Nothing can be more illogical than for a man to take a side on any public question merely because some other man has espoused the opposite side. For example, Mr. Andrew Carnegle may happen to hold entirely just views on a subject involving the interests of organized labor, notwithstanding the Homestead strike. It is also true that Mr. Mark Hanns, being a man of inthe philosopher and becomes the gain-

While it is gratifying to observe the eagerness of men everywhere for instruction in the great political questions of the day, that very condition implies a need of greater effort on the part of those whose duty it is to supply this want. Theirs is an honest desire for light to guide the m in the way of honest action, and it deserves the speediest compliance.

Every day that passes, leaving these anxious voters in ignorance of what they ask to know, is a deplorable addition to the wasted opportunities that give advantage to the other side. The other side knows this well, and is taking advantage of it by disseminating in all directions fabrications caluculated, in the absence of facts, to blind and prejudice the people. The great energy of the money power in politics is never at rest when its interests are am in the way of honest action, and it dethis time can only be dissipated by the well directed force of truth. The means of which the Democratic party stands in great need are being supplied daily by the people through the Journal, and, with the necessary literature in the hands of the oters, there can be little doubt of a general declaration for Bryan and free silver

He defined a "throwing-stick" to be a contrivance for casting a javelin or harpoon which is employed by various savage races, such as the Australians, some South American tribes and especially by the Eskimos.

The patterns of different countries differ from one another, so that a connoisseur can say whether a particular "stick" belongs to Greenland, or Hudson Bay, or Alaska. In 1886 a curator of a Norwegian scientific society found a "throwing-stick" among driftwood at God-thanb, Greenland, different from those used in and practically identical with implements employed by natives living near Behring Strait,

The discoverer, Dr. Hing, set himself the work evident that it had not drifted by way of the Northwest Passage, for that way is barred by such a network of islands that the stick would undoubtedly have stranded long before it reached

The only reasonable explanation he could give was that the stick must have drifted with the current that sets north through Behring Strait into the Arctic Ocean. On the north of the strait the current moves steadily westward. There the stick must have met the current that sweeps down between Iceland and Greenland, and then turned northward again round Cape Farewell This theory appealed to Dr. Namen, and ultimately led him to form his adventurous plan of trusting his little vessel to the current, which he believed would carry him over the Pole.
